I have a loop which creates a group of button elements using ng-repeat. Each button has an ng-click function assigned. Since I am using the ng-repeat it is wrapping the ng-click function around each button and hence a new click function is being called for each element. I have tried creating a function for the ng-click, however I am unable to pass in the function which is created by ng-repeat. `angular.module('app.core.ui') .controller('UIBankTransfer', ['$scope', '$window', '$modal', '$location', '$uibModal', function($scope, $window, $modal, $location, $uibModal) { $scope.transfer = function() { // Create bank transfer var modalInstance = $uibModal.open({ animation: 'am-flip-x', templateUrl:'modal.html', controller: 'BankTransferModalController', resolve: { contact: function() { return $scope.contact; } } }); modalInstance.result.then(function() { $window.location.href = '/'; }, function() {`
